

The Hunted Moon

Blurb

They hunted her like a monster. They never expected her to become one.

Ceren has spent her entire life running - from a past she cannot remember and a power she cannot explain.

Raised as a human. Hunted like something more.

When a violent encounter awakens something ancient within her, the fragile lie of her existence begins to unravel. Shadows whisper her name. Magic answers her call. And the world she thought she knew fractures to reveal something far more dangerous lurking beneath it.

The Fae. Not the stories. Not the myths.

A world divided into powerful citadels, ruled by blood, magic, and ruthless ambition.

Dragged into its deadly politics, Ceren becomes entangled in whispers of a prophecy long buried—one that speaks not of salvation...

...but of ruin.

Because Ceren is not just part of their world - she is the thing their citadels were built to contain.

And then there is him. Eiran Sunstrider. Commander of the Solari Blades. Bastard son and only heir of the late High Lord Theron Solvale. Feared. Respected. Untouchable.

He was forged to lead, to hunt, to destroy anything that threatens the fragile balance of power between the citadels. Including her.

But Eiran doesn't see a monster when he looks at Ceren. He sees something far more dangerous.

An equal.

As war brews between the citadels and the truth of her bloodline begins to surface, Ceren is forced into a brutal game of survival where alliances are fragile, power is everything, and trust is a weapon that can get you killed.

And in a world built to control beings like her Ceren is about to rewrite the rules.
