

A Shattering Of Memory

He was a footnote in her life. She was his whole story.

Blurb

She thought it was safe. Nostalgic. She was wrong.

Thirty-five years after their first love ended, Christina has the life she built on purpose - a steady marriage, a career she's proud of, and a past she thought she'd made peace with. So, when she sends Mark a random friend request, it feels harmless. Just two people who used to know each other reconnecting.

For Mark, it was the opening of a door he thought he'd nailed firmly shut on his past. But once opened, some doors refuse to close and the past stops being something you remember fondly and becomes something you can't escape.

Told across dual timelines - the ache of first love in 1989 and the reckoning it stirs up decades later - A Shattering of Memory is a story about the people we choose, the ones we leave behind, and what it means to discover you're someone else's unfinished chapter.
