

R A Dutil

R.A. Dutil writes dark fantasy that explores the messy, human truths we often try to outrun - stories where the problems are never simple, the answers are never easy, and every step toward self-acceptance comes at a cost.

Her work centres on transformation, resilience, and the quiet, often uncomfortable journey of claiming your power in a world designed to bury it. She holds a Bachelor of Fine Arts in English.

When she's not writing, you'll usually find her getting lost in stories that linger long after the final page, off on adventures with her husband and daughter, or snuggled up with her cat and dog.

Everwild is her debut novel and the first book in the Savage Species series.

Some forests hide wolves. The Everwild gives birth to them.

Bay Campbell has spent her entire life taking care of everyone else. The first time she chooses herself and celebrates a solo birthday trip in the forest, a wolf spirit binds itself to her and claims her as its vessel, transforming her into a werewolf.

She finds herself thrust into the middle of a supernatural war where shapeshifters defend humanity against sorcerers determined to destroy it.

When she finds out the sorcerers have taken her brother, the fight becomes personal, and she'll do whatever it takes to get him back, even if it means becoming a monster herself.

But the spirit inside her is unlike any the shapeshifters have seen before. To save her brother, Bay will have to convince the wolves her spirit can be trusted--and learn to trust it herself. The Everwild is calling. And it won't be denied.
