

Werewolves Of Mexico

Blurb

Under a moon swollen with heat and dust, the Mexican werewolves moved like shadows along the jagged spine of the New Mexico border, their muscles coiled with purpose as they carried tightly wrapped bundles through the desert night. The scent of narcotics mixed with sagebrush and old blood, a trail that whispered danger to anything that knew how to listen. But they were not alone.

From the hollow canyons came something older – skin walkers, their forms shifting in unnatural jerks, eyes glowing with a hunger that wasn't just for flesh, but for identity itself. The air thickened with tension as the werewolves halted, hackles rising, instincts screaming. This was no simple crossing; this was sacred ground, and they had trespassed.

A low growl rippled through the pack just as the first skin walker stepped forward, wearing the stolen face of a man long dead, smiling too wide. What began as a smuggling run was about to become a battle for survival - and for the very souls they carried within them.
