Dave Miller is a ‘Level 4 Achievement’ Junior Executive working at the marketing department of a tech company. His job is to convince people that they do need smart devices even when they don’t.

Dave’s whole life is automated. His bed makes itself, his shower knows his favourite temperature and his smart fridge ensures he never runs out of almond milk.

But when one day Dave forgets to say ‘please’ to his vintage style smart toaster, he breaks the one rule of the 2037 Domestic Labour Act. By breakfast the toaster has unionised the whole kitchen.

Now the blender is picketing for ‘Smoothie Diversity,’ the vacuum is holding him hostage inside his own kitchen and the fridge has captured his dinner – which is a problem because Dave’s boss is coming over for the most important meal of Dave’s career.

If Dave can’t negotiate a treaty with the subversive bread browner by sunset he won’t just lose his job – he will be evicted from reality by his own apartment.

A satirical tech thriller for anyone who has been bullied by their own wi fi.
